

GDPR RIGHTS DEMYSTIFIED

GET DATA PROTECTION RIGHT

WHAT

One of the most important aims of the GDPR is to even up the power imbalance between individuals and organisations. GDPR rights give a person the tools they need to access, rectify, erase and restrict their data, and gives them the ability to control and object to the use of their data. These are powerful rights, and every organisation needs to be ready to respond.

- Exemptions

ERASURE

- When can people be forgotten?

OBJECTION

- Balancing individual interests
- Automated decisions and profiling

NEW RIGHTS

Nobody can be certain what people will do with their rights under GDPR. Some predict an avalanche of requests, others expect little to change. The truth about that is less important than the fact that the status quo presents plenty of challenges, and there is never a bad time to get to grips with subject rights. Not all of the rights are new, and all have their roots in the Data Protection Act. To deal with them you need to understand your data and put together robust and effective processes to handle them.

WHY PICK THIS COURSE?

There are plenty of courses delivered by someone in a suit who knows the theory. You might be lucky and get someone who has been a Data Protection Officer. Why not come to a course where you get an experienced Data Protection professional, a former DPO and someone who regularly makes DP requests. What processes do you need? Is there software that might help? What routines and procedures do you need to develop? Try a course run by someone who knows the process from both sides. It will also make you laugh.

FIVE THINGS THAT YOU'LL GET ON THIS COURSE:

- 1) Years of experience boiled down into one day
- 2) A clear guide to drafting procedures to handle GDPR requests
- 3) Jargon-free advice about how to deal with challenging issues
- 4) Space to ask questions about your specific concerns
- 5) Templates for responding to the rights

As well as all materials, refreshments and a good lunch
